The complete truth of the history of rockets will probably never be entirely clear, but it does seem that it all was started in China over two thousand years ago. But it took on quite a while for rockets to reach Europe. Although the Chinese were fully used to incorporating rockets into their military strategy by the time William the Conqueror invaded England from France in 1066, neither of the English nor the French were familiar with them. The rocket seems to have been arrived in Europe in the year 1241. There are historical records that showing that the Mongols used rockets against the Magyars in their attack on the city of Buda on Christmas Day of that year.
